Evening Chat

Last evening Rev. Dr. Stoetzer preached on the subject of the Kaiser, touching on his various characteristics, his ancestry, and speaking especially of his many brutal qualities which had been inherited. "God never gave such high opportunity nor such possibilities as the Germans enjoyed. It is a tragedy indeed that the ruler of these Germans should be consigned to a bottomless pit by the whole world. But he is guilty indeed of the greatest crime since the Crucifixion!" Rev. Dr. Stoetzer said many people had expressed their opinion of what should be the final punishment of the Kaiser. He felt that the Kaiser should be allowed to live in confinement with food to keep him alive and light enough for him to see to read. He wanted papers and magazines handed to him from time to time with articles in them showing the horrors which the world suffered through him. That, to Rev. Dr. Stoetzer, would be punishment enough.

Granted that the Kaiser possessed the proper sensibilities and mind enough to appreciate these horrors, this sort of punishment might do. There is no suffering like that endured by the sensitive mind! But the Kaiser, according to any record of the happening, has never displayed an appreciative, easily hurt heart. He might read of the world's sufferings to the world's end and not shed a tear! Rather, in view of the fact of his military commitment for life, might he feel the keenest pleasure in knowing just how far his influence and authority has gone. It isn't just natural to expect that now the deed is done and punishment looms large in the near distance, that the Kaiser shall repent—when it is too late. A seeming repentance on his part might be considered by him if it would gain him anything. But now a genuine unhappiness for the ignoble part he has played in the world's war—is not to be expected.

In this connection a poem written by F. D. Van Amburgh, editor of The Silent Partner, a magazine very popular among business men, and published in that journal in November of last year, is interesting. This poem has been widely printed, often quoted and has even been set to music. Curiously enough, according to The Silent Partner, over 100 people throughout the country have laid claim to the authorship. The poem is as follows:

LET HIM LIVE.
So long as flowers their perfume give,
So long I'd let the Kaiser live—
Live and live for a million years,
With nothing to drink but Belgian tears.

With nothing to quench his awful thirst
But the salted brine of a Scotchman's curse.
I could let him live on a dinner each day,
Served from silver on a golden tary—
Served with things both dainty and sweet,
Served with everything but things to eat.

And I'd make him a bed of silken sheen,
With costly linens to lie between,
With covers of down and fillets of lace.

Fairmont, W. Va.

And downy pillows piled in place,
Yet when to its comfort he would
It should sink with rot of the bottle.
And Wood and bones and brains of men
Should cover him, smother him—and then
His pillows should cling with the rotten clay—
Cloy from the grave of a soldier boy.
And while God's stars their vigils keep
And while the waves the white sands sweep,
He should never, never, never sleep.

And through all the days, through all the years,
There should be an anthem in his ears,
Ringings and swingings and never done
From the edge of light to the set of sun,
Moanings and moanings and moanings wild—
A ravaged French girl's bastard child!

And I would build him a castle by the sea,
As lovely a castle as ever could be;
Then I'd show him a ship from over the sea.
As fine a ship as ever could be,
Laden with water and gold and sweet,
Laden with everything good to eat;
Yet scarce does she touch the silvered sands.

Scarce may he reach his eager hands,
Than a hot and a hellish molten shell
Should change his heaven into hell.
And though he'd watch on the wave-swept shore,
Our Lusitania would rise no more!

In "No Man's Land," where the Irish fell,
I'd start the Kaiser a private hell;
I'd jab him, stab him, give him gas;
In every wound I'd pour ground glass.
I'd march him out where the brave boys died—
Out past the lads they crucified.

In the fearful gloom of his living tomb
There is one thing I'd do before I was through:
I'd make him sing, in a stirring manner,
The wonderful words of
"The Star-Spangled Banner."
